have yet to come into being. But what about the seed for Civilization Z? It is possible that it is present in this very moment and moving through us now.

Perhaps there is a bit of Civilization Z’s image within us. We naturally seek to live life to the fullest. We don’t like to wage war or suffer. We want to help one another and find greater fulfillment through connecting to something greater than ourself. And by seeking this, we want to understand the point and meaning of it all. That is why we try to make sense of what seems to make so little sense right now. And if we seek to connect with this super intelligence whose potential is to branch off of our lineage, it means we also seek to push the limits of our own nature and understanding.

And in pushing the limits of ourselves and our potential, it is possible we could create a timeline that avoids the nightmare of Revelation presented in the Bible and World War III depicted in the secular story of Star Trek. Maybe it is possible we could end our wars now and live out a more meaningful timeline of the future in peace. And even if this was not possible, shouldn’t we at least make our most valiant effort and find out if it is?

A Dream Without a Nightmare:

2012 - 2018 • The United States withdrawals the last of its forces as the Iraqi government takes over the management of its own country. • American forces return from Afghanistan. Drone strikes end. • The first manned mission is sent to Mars for flyby of the red planet and return home. • The Military Industrial Complex begins the process of retooling their weapons factories for the much more rewarding work of bringing humankind together in pursuit of space exploration. • Democratic restructuring of the United Nations Security Council to reflect the balance and ideals of true Democracy. Or a new global institution is created that is capable of rising up to the daunting challenges at hand. • New solar cell technology is developed that allows for the creation of solar powered automobiles with the strength of gas powered engines. • Assembly begins on a starship in Earth orbit the size of the USS Enterprise from Star Trek. buildtheenterprise.org

Scientists from all nations join together on this international collaborative effort. • Israelis and Palestinians sign a peace deal and tear down the walls as the two states merge into one as first state and cornerstone for a future United States of Earth.

2019 - 2026 • Every man and woman on the planet is equipped with a solar powered hand held tablet super computer connected to the internet. • Billions of jobs created for the transition from the oil to solar age.

2027 - 2036 • Nuclear disarmament. • Vatican City is the last state to join the newly established United States of Earth. • Environmental destruction and global warming begin to reverse as millions of gas powered vehicles are recycled. • Earth’s first planetary starship is completed and embarks on its first mission to the moon with a crew of a thousand people. At the start of 2037, this ship will be sent on humanity’s first three month manned mission to Mars.

2037 - Forward • Humanity is now free to explore the universe without danger of self destructing.

And it’s possible that those of differing mental persuasions who happen to read this brochure, are not offended, but empowered and inspired by its vision of unity and the possibility we all have more in common for peace than irreconcilable differences for war.

The Gospel of a Possibillion

It is entirely possible we live in a world where our worst nightmares can be transformed into beautiful dreams. It is entirely possible that when things seem like they can’t go any more wrong, something changes and the situation is turned around in an instant. It is entirely possible the curse of illness and disease in life can be broken by an immune system that finally figures out how to do its job. It is entirely possible a new life of health, energy and untapped creative power can be found, allowing for the fulfillment of our highest potential.

It is also possible we live on a planet where World War III can be prevented and Martin Luther King Jr.’s Dream Reborn. It is entirely possible America could wake from her nightmare and become the dream of World Spirit.

It is entirely possible we all can find meaning and joy in our existence beyond the first-tier biological imperative of evolution; survival of the fittest and self-centered egoism trampling over the collective.

Perhaps it’s possible to help each other reach our full actualization as fearless World Citizens, tapping into the greatest human potential as Avatars of spirit, reassured by the heart that when we pass on from this life, something beautiful awaits us and every being who has ever occupied a place in this universe of space and time, no matter how brief and insignificant it may seem.

It is possible that humanity is destined to come together and join in a more perfect union as a United States of Earth; a species at peace and prosperity. It is entirely possible that those fighting over religion and non religion are all partially right. The Kosmos is a massive entity so full of hidden secrets and amazing contradictions, that no person is capable of being 100% completely wrong all the time.

It is entirely possible the Buddhists are correct, and that all beings will find enlightenment at the end of time. It is entirely possible the Taoists are right and all reality is built upon a foundation of polar opposites in balance. It is also possible the Hindus are right and that the universe has been cycling between birth and destruction for all eternity. It is also possible the Muslims are right and that one day the Mahdi will return to unite the Arab world in peace and justice with women finally enjoying the same rights and privileges as men.

It is also possible the Jews are right and that a powerful being will arrive to Earth to bring peace and be embraced as the Messiah. And perhaps the Christians are also right; that good will triumph over evil in the end. And it’s possible the masses of every religion are capable of looking beyond the superficial differences of surfaces separating them from those thinking different, to find the common ground uniting us all together through the universal hidden depths of our shared humanity. And it is also possible the Atheists are right and that the nature of the universe is much more frightening, complex and wonderful than the wrathful, megalomaniacal and paternalistic God of the Old Testament could ever dream of being. And it is possible the greatest story can’t be written in a book, but experienced fully in the present moment as the Kosmos continues to unfold towards greater wholeness and beauty. And in the new super story of the Possibillion, binding together all the other stories, we may find something even more satisfying than what was presented in once limited and isolated perspectives.

It is possible our cosmic drama unfolding, will only find consumption and fulfillment over a trillion years from now in the future. And it is here where the possibility of Civilization Z awaits us. They stand as symbol for the last civilization of our universe, coming into being after hundreds of billions of years of steady evolution. Imagine this civilization made up of a near infinite number of beings at a higher level of consciousness than any God ever imagined in Earth’s past. Imagine the Omega civilization of the Kosmos driven by alien ingenuity with technology beyond that conceivable to us. And imagine each one possessing a super intelligence guiding them towards a goal not unlike the Bodhisattva vow; saving and ending the suffering of all beings in the universe, past and future.

Visualize the infinite potential of a Kosmos that holds within its birth, the seed to enlightened completion at the end of time, where Civilization Z possesses the miraculous technology capable of tapping into the vast infinite data field forming the foundation of all reality. And the mandate of this civilization is to know itself by slowly decoding this information by rewinding time and space itself, resurrecting and reassembling all beings who have ever occupied a place in the Kosmos. In short, Civilization Z may one day merge with the universe as an entity many humans today would identify as God, capable of connecting all the dots that ever came into being; seeking to understand the purpose and meaning of it all.

And it is possible that after they find what they’re looking for, this entity may re-engineer the universe to be born again in a new form that works perfectly at the very beginning, rather than only torturously slow towards the very end, after over a trillion years of steady evolution.

What are the implications of Civilization Z and the potential for their existence in the future? Does this mean our past concept of God is mistaken and that “it” is really something evolving through us? Perhaps the consummation of this super intelligence is both here and now as the seed moving forward in time and its completion hundreds of billions of years in the future. Would this idea negate the possibility of prayer and a personal relationship with the divine, or would it enhance it? We can’t yet pray to Civilization Z because they...
